Rosecrance Lakeview opening soon in Chicago

Excitement is building as Rosecrance Lakeview, a new outpatient center and recovery home for young adults, prepares to open in the coming weeks.

The new facility is located at 3701 N. Ashland Ave. in Chicago and primarily will serve clients ranging in age from 18 to 29. The first floor will house the outpatient counseling center, while floors two through four will have short- and long-term housing for young adults seeking a safe, sober environment to help further their recovery.

Lakeview is slated to open this spring; an official opening date is dependent on several factors, including the construction schedule, and state and federal licensing and credentialing processes.

Chris Yadron, Rosecrance’s director of Chicago recovery services, said Lakeview stands apart because it’s tailored to young adults and it’s accessible to many educational, career and transportation options for that population.

“It’s a unique opportunity for young adults to fully engage in their program of recovery and not only sustain a period of abstinence but also achieve the help and support and the skills necessary to make recovery a lifelong commitment and process,” Yadron said.

Lakeview programming will be highly structured and clients will have individualized treatment plans to fit their needs. Some residents may have already completed primary treatment episodes and are ready to take the next steps with education or finding jobs. So, they may be involved in individual tutoring with recovery specialists, job training or part-time employment; attend 12-step meetings; and participate in individual, group and family counseling.

Visit rosecrance.org/launchtolife to learn more about Rosecrance Lakeview and its related Launch to Life campaign or to donate online. For additional questions, contact Margaret Wenzel, director of development in Chicago, at The Rosecrance Foundation: mwenzel@rosecrance.org or 312.550.8270.
The symposium is open to anyone with an interest in furthering the conversation about behavioral health in the fire service, including new and longtime firefighters and paramedics, fire service administration, chaplains, clinicians, family members and government officials/fire department trustees and board members.

“We want people to feel normal, to feel it’s OK to talk about these issues, that there are people who care,” DeGryse said. “I want people to walk out of this event and go back to have these discussions in an open forum so we can continue to leave the fire house better than we found it.”

Contact Dan DeGryse at ddegryse@rosecrance.org for more information.

Registration for the Rosecrance Florian Symposium will begin early summer. Watch rosecrance.org periodically for registration details.
Services expanding this spring in Iowa

Rosecrance has purchased a well-known substance abuse treatment provider in Iowa to expand services to teens, adults and families.

This spring, Rosecrance started managing operations of New Life Outpatient Center in Davenport, which now takes on the Rosecrance name. New Life was founded in 1991 by Mike Shovlain as the state’s first for-profit outpatient center for substance abuse treatment.

Mike’s wife, Cheryl, who’s worked at New Life for more than a decade, took over the business after he passed away in 2014. Mike was a visionary in the behavioral health field, spending more than 30 years helping people overcome addiction through hospital-based, nonprofit and employee assistance programs. He started in the medical field as a nurse working in a Cook County hospital emergency room.

“He knew everybody in the field, both on the Illinois and Iowa side of the river,” Cheryl said. “I wish he could be here for this. I wish he could see how well we have done, even this past year. He had a great ability to read people, to find good staff, and he was very, very loved by anyone who would come in contact with him.”

Rosecrance New Life provides an array of substance abuse treatment services for adults, including OWI (operating while intoxicated) evaluations, extended and intensive outpatient treatment, continuing care, and an OWI/DUI (driving under influence) Victim Impact Panel Program. For adolescents, New Life offers individualized treatment plans, family support groups, extended outpatient and adolescent intensive outpatient services.

Services and staffing at New Life will remain the same once the business transaction is finalized this spring. Cheryl is retiring, and Austin Gross, a certified alcohol and drug counselor and New Life’s clinical manager, will lead operations.

Cheryl said “everybody is happy with the choice” of Rosecrance leading New Life from this point forward. Lisa Primm, Rosecrance’s community relations coordinator, drew parallels between Mike’s work in Iowa and the Quad Cities with Rosecrance founders James and Fanny Rosecrance.

“This started as one person’s dream,” Primm said of New Life. “Mike was one of the pioneers in that community, and he really molded the clinical services there during the past 30 years. That’s why it’s so special for us to be able to come in and join forces with an organization that already has such a great reputation and legacy in the community. Rosecrance’s goal is to complement what the Quad Cities has and grow services even more.”

Rosecrance and SwedishAmerican: Behavioral health care in a hospital setting

Inside two rooms on the fourth floor of SwedishAmerican Hospital, patients can express their feelings by writing words and pictures on chalkboards. They can snuggle with a toy dog or calmly sift through plastic sandboxes that sit on tables during counseling sessions.

These “soothing” rooms are a unique feature of the Center for Behavioral Health, which provides inpatient psychiatric care and treatment for adolescents and adults. Rosecrance partnered with SwedishAmerican, a division of UW Health, in 2013 to manage behavioral health services.

The hospital has a bed capacity for 20 adults and 12 adolescents, and services are provided 24 hours a day, seven days a week. The center also has a partial program where patients stay at the hospital for about six hours during the weekdays and then return home during the evenings; it’s designed as a stepdown from the hospital.

For inpatient care, patients stay at the center an average of six to nine days, though there’s no maximum limit on how long they can stay—treatment plans are individualized to fit their needs, said Amy Kirsch, MSN, RN, the center’s director of psychiatric services. Daily schedules are highly structured, with group meetings about depression and anxiety, anger, wellness and goals. The center has recreation and fitness rooms, which are part of the therapeutic recreation program that includes activities such as expressive art. Patients also explore spirituality and participate in family groups, as well as meet individually for counseling and medication assistance with their physicians. Telepsychiatry, which allows patients to communicate with doctors in real time through a TV and video camera, is also used to facilitate patient appointments.

The soothing rooms have reduced the use of restraints and help patients calm and soothe themselves in a safe environment. Their use is voluntary, and Kirsch said patients use them daily. Kirsch spoke about the successful results of using the rooms at the 2014 American Psychiatric Nurses Association Conference, and the organization included research in its respective journal.

“The rooms are good for many of our clients because they’re seen as non-threatening environments,” Kirsch said. “The sensory items are welcoming, and the patients really like the chalkboards... because they can write whatever they want without being penalized."

The center received a small makeover that included new flooring and paint in summer 2015. Nature scenes now decorate patient rooms, and the space has a more modern feel.

Grants help students with behavioral health crises

Rosecrance has received positive feedback and is seeing early success with a preventative behavioral health program in local schools funded graciously by the Community Foundation of Northern Illinois through funds established by Dr. Louis and Violet Rubin.

The $45,000 grant helped pay for Rosecrance’s Open Access and Child and Family Counseling program, which integrates short-term counseling services for children and a skills training program for parents. Services are available to students served by the school-based health center at Auburn High School in Rockford and regardless of their ability to pay. The goal is to help students manage their behavioral health in a proactive way and prevent mental health crises.

Group work in schools started in early September, and Rosecrance has already documented a decrease in emergency service inquiries. In the 61101 ZIP code—the northwest part of Rockford served by the health center—crisis interventions dropped by 37 percent.

Students ask for help directly or are often referred for services by school nurses, teachers and counselors. They might be stressed or having a bad day, or someone noticed a change in their behavior.

Katie Heisler, Rosecrance’s team leader at the school-based health center, runs seven groups at Ellis Elementary School for students in kindergarten through fifth grades. Girls’ groups work on relational aggression, positive peer relationships and self-awareness; boys’ groups focus on positive peer relationships, impulse control and anger management.

Each group runs for an hour once per week within the school environment, Heisler said.

Martina Smith, principal at Ellis Elementary School, said the program has provided consistency for students and families with Heisler being available to them.

“Students are able to get help and feedback to fix behaviors and return to class to have a successful day,” Smith said. “(They’re) using language and strategies to solve problems. We are able to keep students in school and get them what they need rather than using an out-of-school intervention.”
Hospital partnerships expand access

Rosecrance has strengthened its partnership with Rockford hospitals to improve access to behavioral health services in the community.

Two Rosecrance staff are now embedded at Rockford Memorial Hospital: Ann Petty works with children in the pediatric department, and Lindsay Pozzi counsels patients at the pain center.

Petty provides mental health outreach to help link children to appropriate services and provides counseling for clients within the clinic setting. Hospital leaders have made a concerted effort to screen youth for depression and identify those who need follow-up care. One of Petty’s goals is to help children and families partner with their care providers in meeting overall health care goals.

“The families really like to come to the clinic setting. It’s a very non-threatening, familiar territory,” Petty said.

Requests run the gamut, from where to find resources about a new autism diagnosis to parenting strategies to deal with different behaviors. Petty said she sees a lot of children with depression and anxiety, those dealing with family issues such as divorce and grief/loss, as well as suicide and self-harming.

Pozzi’s position has evolved to help patients who are struggling with depression, anxiety and anger associated with their chronic pain. She teaches patients coping skills, which can be used to decrease depression, anxiety and anger or help distract patients from their pain. Pozzi completes a psychosocial assessment, which includes screening for depression, potential risk for abusing substances and potential risk of a patient developing problems when placed on long-term opioid therapy.

“When patients come to realize they have chronic pain, they go through a grieving process,” Pozzi said. “At first they are in denial and then shocked. They then become angry and begin bargaining and often start to feel depressed. My goal is to help my patients get to the acceptance stage, and I do this by teaching them different ways of thinking. Many of my patients have a limited support system, so just being there for them and listening to what they are going through is very therapeutic for them.”

Traumas such as car accidents or work injuries are often the source of patients’ chronic pain. Pozzi also leads a chronic pain support group that meets on the fourth Thursday each month. Meetings feature speakers such as chiropractors, nutritionists, acupuncturists, licensed massage therapists, certified yoga instructors and more.
Furry friend helps Rosecrance clients feel at home

An energetic four-legged friend has found a home at Rosecrance’s Griffin Williamson Campus, interacting with teen clients in recovery.

Gracie Rose is a 2-year-old mixed-breed dog that Rosecrance staff found at an Ogle County animal shelter after she was rescued during a storm in Arkansas. Though not an official therapy dog, Gracie interacts with clients in treatment for substance abuse, most often during one-on-one counseling sessions. Clients also help with Gracie in other ways, such as taking her on walks and assisting with her training.

“Many of our kids come to us using substances because they’re trying to manage other feelings or situations in their lives,” said Dr. Thomas Wright, Rosecrance’s chief medical officer. “One of the ways we try to help them with that is to develop coping skills to manage things like anxiety, depression and anger.

“Gracie offers another coping skill: Oftentimes, it’s joyful distraction, and distraction is a coping skill we use a lot of time in cognitive behavioral treatment. I’ve used her a number of times if kids are in my office and they’re struggling with anger or after a phone call with a parent. Helping them feel more engaged, safe and confident here can help them communicate and open up.”

Jaime Burch, a supervisor at Griffin Williamson, sent detailed instructions about Gracie’s behavior commands to Rosecrance staff to be consistent with her training.

“Gracie teaches kids how to have control: how to walk her, how to take care of her and show her the right commands,” Burch said. “That’s important, especially in recovery, because the kids have to follow the rules so she doesn’t jump up, and they have to clean up after her. The most important thing with training is consistency, and it’s the same with recovery.”

Famous dogs through Rosecrance history

Dogs have been part of the Rosecrance community for many years, going back several decades to the organization’s former adolescent treatment campus on Alpine Road.

Queenie lived at the old Rosecrance campus on Alpine Road in Rockford during the 1970s. Former Rosecrance Executive Director Don Allen remembered one young resident who used to take Queenie on walks and talk to her.

“I don’t know what he told her, but it was good therapy,” Allen recalled.

Another dog named Bruno lived at the rural campus in Durand during the same time period.

Rosie, an energetic collie/shepherd mix, came to the Rosecrance Griffin Williamson Campus in 2006 initially to help keep geese out of the two ponds on site. But clients and staff loved spending time with her, too, and were saddened by her death in 2014.

Ron Waldschmidt, director, was part of the staff at the Rosecrance Rural Campus who took care of Bruno.

Open house welcomes visitors to new outpatient office

Behavioral health professionals and community members got a glimpse Feb. 11 of the new outpatient Rosecrance Milwaukee County office in Hales Corners, Wisconsin. The office, 10950 W. Forest Home Ave., offers intensive outpatient services for adolescents and young adults ranging in age from 13 to 26. It’s located on the second floor of a mixed-use office and retail building near Interstate 43. Services started at the beginning of the year. Andy Moon works as an addictions counselor at the office and leads an adolescent intensive outpatient group on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays. Tuesday is a family night where clients can bring family members; topics include education about addiction, the 12 steps and coping skills. Call 414-367-2249 to schedule a free substance abuse assessment or for more information.

Rosecrance hires attorney Kelly J. Epperson as first in-house general counsel

A local attorney with extensive experience representing physicians, hospitals and behavioral health providers has joined Rosecrance as its first-ever in-house general counsel, which is a vice president position. Kelly J. Epperson, formerly with the law firm of Hinshaw & Culbertson, provides comprehensive legal services to Rosecrance, including directing corporate activities to protect Rosecrance’s legal interests; assisting with global joint ventures, strategic partnership deals, and mergers and acquisitions; analyzing novel legal issues that uniquely impact behavioral health care providers; researching and influencing legislative changes at the state and federal levels; working to minimize legal exposure while maximizing legal rights; and positioning Rosecrance to be a legally sound not-for-profit so it can continue to fulfill its mission. Epperson is a 2008 graduate of the Northern Illinois University College of Law. She received a bachelor’s degree in East Asian Studies, Economics and History from the University of Wisconsin at Madison.

Rosecrance a new partner in teen-focused website

Rosecrance recently partnered with a local student to produce behavioral health-focused articles for her website, which offers a variety of educational content geared toward teenagers. Bridget Krysztopa, a junior at Keith Country Day School in Rockford, launched bFITTEENS in 2015. The website features blog entries written for teens by teens and industry professionals with positive and reliable health, fitness and financial advice. Rosecrance signed on as a sponsor and monthly blogger for bFIT in December. Other sponsors and bloggers are Alpine Bank, Rockford Spine Center, Rockford Health System and the YMCA of Rock River Valley. Krysztopa reached out to Rosecrance after receiving inquiries through the site from teens with questions and concerns about behavioral health issues. Visit bftteens.com for more information. You can also find bFITTEENS on Facebook, Twitter and Instagram.
Two new docs join medical staff

A medical leadership team of about two dozen people, including psychiatrists, primary care providers and advanced practice nurses, provides care for thousands of children, adolescents, young adults, adults and families each year at Rosecrance. Drs. Therese Lucietto and Joseph Neubauer joined the medical staff as primary care providers in late 2015 and have started working with clients at the Rosecrance Harrison Campus. Dr. Kent Hess retired in December after more than 20 years of service to Rosecrance. Medical team members see clients at Rosecrance’s four main campuses in Rockford, SwedishAmerican Hospital, Rosecrance McHenry County and Rosecrance’s recovery homes, supportive housing apartment buildings and other affiliated sites.

Rosecrance’s David Gomel earns Ph.D.

David Gomel, Rosecrance’s senior vice president and chief operating officer, received a Ph.D. in public policy and administration from Walden University of Minneapolis, Minnesota. Gomel has spent more than 20 years working for Rosecrance and oversees operations at more than 40 sites. His doctoral studies were focused on nonprofit administration. He also has degrees from Northern Illinois University and the University of St. Francis. In addition, Gomel is a certified Alcohol and Other Drug Abuse (AODA) counselor. Before becoming chief operating officer in 2011, Gomel served as the administrator at the Rosecrance Griffin Williamson Campus, home to inpatient teen addiction treatment services. He is active in the community as a volunteer for many charitable organizations, including Special Olympics and Make-A-Wish Foundation.

Criminal justice official Rodger Heaton visits Rosecrance

Illinois criminal justice leader Rodger Heaton visited Rosecrance on Feb. 5 for tours of two local facilities and a discussion about programming and the importance of behavioral health care funding. Heaton serves as chairman of the Illinois State Commission on Criminal Justice and Sentencing Reform. He is also the public safety director and homeland security advisor for Illinois Governor Bruce Rauner. Heaton toured the Rosecrance Mulberry Center, a unique facility that houses triage, crisis residential and detoxification services for people experiencing psychiatric crises and those with co-occurring mental health and substance abuse disorders. He also toured the Rosecrance Ware Center, home to adult outpatient mental health services and some substance abuse treatment programs. Heaton said it was beneficial for him to learn more about how Rosecrance’s programs work and who is served by them in the community.

Alfred Bersted Foundation gives Rosecrance a wonderful gift

The Alfred Bersted Foundation gave Rosecrance $20,000 to distribute educational curriculum kits, including teachers’ guides and a Rosecrance substance abuse prevention education publication entitled “Been There—Teens in Recovery Tell It Like It Is.” More than 12,000 middle school and nearly 20,000 high school students in McHenry County will receive this publication, which encourages good choices, through the generosity of the Alfred Bersted Foundation.
Annual benefit goes vintage

The 2016 Rosecrance Foundation Benefit combined modern and vintage elements with special performers Redux Jazz Orchestra helping celebrate the agency’s 100th anniversary.

The benefit took place at 6:30 p.m. Monday, April 25, at Giovanni’s Restaurant & Convention Center in Rockford.

Proceeds from the benefit support The Kinley Charity Care Fund, which helps youth, adults and families who seek treatment for substance abuse and mental illness. The fund has provided more than $7 million in charity care since it was established in 1984.

Redux Jazz Orchestra features performers from Postmodern Jukebox, a dynamic touring ensemble that gained fame and notoriety with its viral videos featuring vintage remakes of modern songs such as “All About That Bass” and “Thrift Shop.” Redux is a nine-person combo with three singers, five instrumentalists and a tap dancer.

Some benefit attendees dressed in vintage attire as Rosecrance celebrates its 100th anniversary in 2016. The benefit featured a timeline exhibit highlighting Rosecrance’s history and a special presentation to open the event.

“We just continue to be grateful for the faithful support of people in the community. We have so many people who have been dedicated benefactors for many years,” said Anne Boccignone, Rosecrance’s vice president of development. “It’s because of them that we have been able to provide more than $7 million in charity care since the inception of the Kinley fund.”

Watch for the full benefit recap in the next issue.
Rockford couple prioritizes planned giving

Talk to Lyn and Roger Becknell for just a few minutes, and you’ll feel their passion for Rockford. Roger grew up on the west side of town and graduated from Rock Valley College. Although Lyn has lived in Rockford since the 1970s, she’s a native of Charleston, South Carolina.

They started Abbott Plastics, a small plastics fabricating and machining company, in 1980. Lyn said the company grew to be successful “beyond their wildest imagination,” and they made it a priority to share their success with the community, including Rosecrance.

“If it’s not us, who’s going to do it?” Lyn said. “It’s so important for us to give back. This is our community.”

The Becknells are members of The 1916 Society, which honors people who have remembered Rosecrance in their wills and trusts. The name reflects the year Rosecrance was founded and gives a nod to our founders, Dr. James and Fanny Rosecrance.

The Becknells’ service to Rosecrance goes back several decades. Roger is a 20-year member of Try-Beta Club, a service organization comprised of local businessmen. Try-Beta has supported Rosecrance through volunteer work, fundraising and donations since the 1970s. Roger also served on Rosecrance’s board of directors.

Lyn has been a member of the Rockford Woman’s Club for more than 30 years. One of the club’s philanthropic projects involves Rosecrance Greendale House, a recovery home for adults and women with children. The club donates time and gifts for families.

The Becknells understand Rosecrance’s work as they have seen relatives and friends struggle with substance abuse. That’s why they prioritized making a planned gift that will help Rosecrance continue to help people in the future.

“Addiction is a growing problem in our society, and it’s really important that we address it and the treatment work continues,” Lyn said. “The more the government doesn’t hold up its end of the bargain, the more places like Rosecrance depend on people like us. That’s why we feel so strongly about it.”

The 1916 Society

The 1916 Society allows us to thank and honor our friends for their philanthropic commitment of future support to Rosecrance.

You may enroll in The 1916 Society by designating any of these gifts:

- Bequest in your will or trust agreement (as a percentage of your estate or a specific donation amount)
- Charitable remainder trust
- Charitable lead trust
- Designating The Rosecrance Foundation as the beneficiary of retirement assets, IRAs, life insurances etc.
- Gift of real estate or other property

If you have made a planned or estate gift to benefit The Rosecrance Foundation, please let us know. You are a valued friend and we want to thank you.

The Rosecrance Foundation Chicago Board presents

Congressman
Patrick J. Kennedy

A Common Struggle: A Personal Journey Through the Past and Future of Mental Illness and Addiction

Please join us on October 19 at The 2016 Rosecrance Foundation Chicago Benefit in downtown Chicago and hear from a pioneer in the field of addiction and mental health parity, Congressman Patrick J. Kennedy.

Congressman Kennedy’s keynote address will detail his personal and political fight with substance use disorders and mental health. He’ll explore the history of behavioral health care in the US and discuss why communities need to invest in innovative resources like the Rosecrance Lakeview counseling center and recovery residence in Chicago.

The 2016 Rosecrance Foundation Chicago Benefit is open to alumni, friends of the Rosecrance Foundation, corporate supporters and members of the public. Proceeds from the 2016 Chicago Benefit will support The Rosecrance Kinley Charity Care Fund, which helps youth, adults and families.

Generous gifts from friends enables Rosecrance to offer the best opportunity for lasting recovery to those in need.

Heavy rain didn’t stop “Team Rosecrance” from participating in the Ignite the Spirit “Run for the Kids 5K” July 16 at Soldier Field in Chicago. The race is organized annually by Ignite the Spirit, an organization launched in 2003 by Chicago firefighters in response to the attacks of 9/11 and to help the families of first responders. Rosecrance helps sponsor the event and has been involved since 2012.
